Course Type	Elective
Course Level	Bachelor Degree
Objective	This course takes “youth” as the object of study, the youth is the transitional stage between the childhood and adulthood and in fact it's a product of “modernity”, and a “social” identity which transforms itself according to the conditions of the time. The course aims to familiarize students with youth studies and youth culture through a multidisciplinary approach with a particular emphasis on the history of youth in Turkey.
Content	The course begins with a brief history of youth and with the transformation that the youth had lived within the passage from traditional society to modern society. After this introduction to concept of “youth” as a product of modernity, the course will continue by analyzing the youth acting as a “political player” while underlying the generation of ‘68 throughout the world. Then, another line of the course will focus on the juvenile cultures that had initiated from 1950s in order to treat the mode, music and literature, and juvenile subcultures. Secondly, the course will examine the Turkish youth by using an approach in three generations (the first generation of Republic, the generation from 1960s to 1970s, generation post-1980s) within the context that is both cultural and political.
