Language of Instruction	French
Course Type	Compulsory
Course Level	Masters Degree
Objective	This seminar is designed to develop the skills necessary for writing a Master's thesis in International Relations according to academic standards. It encompasses fundamental stages, including source identification and research, conceptualization, and creating a structured writing plan. The emphasis is placed on qualitative research methods.
Content	Texts detailing the development and transformation stages of methodologies in international relations are read and discussed interactively. We explore various conceptual and theoretical approaches, including topic selection, formulation of research questions, literature reviews, hypothesis formulation, content or discourse analysis models, and types of research plans. Case studies are examined to provide a tangible understanding of these analytical methods.
