Objective Objective of the course is to study essential principals of the law of notification and the articles of the code of notification.

This course examines the principles of notification law (service of process) and the scope of the Notification Act, which serve as the fundamental guarantee for the right to a fair trial and the right to be heard. The course content covers the basic procedural rules, such as to whom (natural and legal persons), where, and when notification is to be made. In this context, practical applications are addressed, such as service to persons residing in the same dwelling, the temporary absence of the addressee, impossibility of service, and refusal to accept service.

Content

The course also covers special service procedures like service by publication and international service. A critical focus of the course is irregular service (usulsüz tebligat), its legal consequences, and its direct relationship with the right to be heard. Finally, the notification of address changes, the importance of the service record, and penal provisions related to service are also examined.
