Language of Instruction	Turkish
Course Type	Elective
Course Level	Bachelor Degree
Objective	This course, a continuation of the "Philosophical Texts" from the Fall semester, focuses on closely examining and analyzing major early modern philosophical writings. The series of lectures highlights how rational, moral, and political thinking evolved throughout the 17th and 18th centuries. By placing an emphasis on active engagement with the texts, the program seeks to empower students in textual analysis from the original language, conceptual reconstruction, and historical contextualization, rather than presenting a didactic collection of doctrines. The semester will primarily concentrate on the oscillation between metaphysical rationalism and skeptical criticism, together with the moral, social, and historical roots of philosophy's reconstruction throughout this period.
Content	The curriculum will explore how the objects, methods, and objectives of philosophy have evolved over time, tracing developments since the onset of modernity, from Thomas Hobbes to Sophie de Grouchy. Throughout the semester, we anticipate visiting lecturers from Sorbonne University's Philosophy Department to take part in brief lectures as part of our collaboration . As soon as the dates and subject matter of these interventions are confirmed, announcements will be made.
