Content	This course provides an in-depth examination of the institutions of collusion and revocatory action within the context of substantive law and enforcement law. In the first phase, the concept of collusion, its types, and its effects, particularly in the law of obligations and inheritance law, are discussed. In the second phase, revocatory actions under the Execution and Bankruptcy Law are detailed. Within this framework, the subject of the action, onerous and gratuitous transactions, and voidable transactions made with the intent to harm creditors are examined. Additionally, procedural aspects such as the competent court and jurisdiction, time limits for filing a lawsuit, parties to the action, and trial procedure are covered. Finally, the relationship between collusion and revocatory action is analyzed, and the consequences of the revocatory action in terms of enforcement and bankruptcy law are evaluated in the light of case law.
