Course Level	Bachelor Degree
Objective	In this course, we will explore various contemporary approaches providing different insights into the state and how they support or oppose each other. We will review a range of different perspectives from pluralism, neo-Marxism and historical institutionalism to feminist and post-structuralist approaches. This course will try to deepen students' understanding of the theoretical approaches to studying the state and politics.
Content	This course aims to assist critical understanding of the state by introducing a variety of different theoretical perspectives in this field. The course will directly or indirectly address several issues related to the study of the state through a very rich literature on the subject. We have attempted to present a broad selection of approaches that have major Influences on the contemporary debates on the state, but they are far from being comprehensive.
